Development of the Sloane Square area began when Sir Hans Sloane acquired the Manor of Chelsea in 1712 for a 'country retreat'. The composition of Sloane Square reflects this wonderful period in history. Houses and buildings in the area, many by Henry Holland, master builder and son-in-law of Capability Brown, are famous for their distinctive and progressive design and stonemasonry.

The Oriel is a great example of this style of architecture,

Specialist restoration repairs were carried out to any deteriorating stonework as well as general repairs to brickwork.

C & D Restoration Limited carried out a thorough clean to all stonework and brickwork using specialist systems chosen specifically due to the condition of the building. The heated 'DOFF' system was used on the brickwork and the Jos/TORC system on the intricate stone detailing.
